Issue number 6 – 30 Apr 2014

Private Military & Security Companies and their impacts on human rights: Recent developments

The items included below are from October 2013 to April 2014.

In the last six months we have seen some new trends and the continuation of older ones; these are reflected in the items included in this bulletin.

In relation to reported negative human rights impacts by PMSCs, some continue to occur in areas of conflict or weak governance such as Afghanistan, Iraq and Somalia, but we have seen a rising of reports alleging abuses in other regions, especially in South America. For instance, in Brazil the security firm Gaspem was allegedly involved in violence against indigenous people, and in Honduras security firms were reportedly involved in the alleged killing, kidnapping and forced evictions of farmers. It is concerning to see various reports of abuses by PSMCs that provide detention centres services, mainly catering to immigrants or asylum seekers: In Papua New Guinea, G4S allegedly used excessive force in suppressing a riot at an immigration detention centre; in the UK, Serco guards were investigated after allegations of inappropriate sexual behaviour at an immigration removal centre. Recent reports restate concerns about the UN use of PMSCs' allegedly involved in abuses.

We sought responses from eight security companies to reports alleging human rights abuses; in seven cases the companies sent us a response.

Developments on PMSCs' legal accountability happened not just through lawsuits, but also via non-judicial mechanisms, such as the OECD complaints system. For example, a complaint was submitted to the OECD National Contact Point in Spain to investigate alleged abuses of freedom of association by Prosegur in South America.

At the international level, the oversight mechanism of the Intl. Code of Conduct for Private Security Service Providers ("ICoC Association") continued its development; Norway is a new government member and more security companies – standing currently at 157 - have joined the ICoC Association. The Voluntary Principles on Security and Human Rights have seen renewed attention with the US Govt. and the UN Working Group on business and human rights encouraging more countries to join the initiative. The UN Working Group on the use of mercenaries continues to focus on the use of PMSCs by the UN itself and called for a legally binding agreement to regulate the industry.
